Conflict Resolution in the Field of Energy Transformation from an Environmental Psychological Perspective

The lecture will work on the three topics: (A) conflict solution in the (B) German energy transitions from (C) a mainly environmental psychological perspective. It will structure the issue of social acceptance of renewable energy production and use, including the discussions on power lines. It will also refer to new social movements on energy transformations and the conflicts of different standpoints. All this will be seen from a psychological perspective starting with the individual who integrates itself into broader systems and acts on different levels of and with different roles in society.
